Blog Post 1:

I like flat internet things. Not pancake flat, not waffle flat, neither a cracker flat. Perhaps just into flat internet things such as what paper looks like on screens. A non-food to be exact. Paper is a non-food.

'what paper' looks like on screens isn't just a photo taken of a piece of paper one can buy from an office store,

It can be a white rectangle such as the one I am typing into now. An Ultra precise (could be a lotion name) white rectangle.

Talking about what I dislike about the internet is far high in a BMI. I do not want to calculate or evaluate all the bad, cause frankly I rather be sat in a corner of a room with artificial turf and eat salmon for a minute. Then, only after having eaten I can create an airline to fly to Yugoslavia called Albatross Airlines, and the spirit animal of Albatross Airlines is the Albatross' uncle. The uncle looks familiar to the humans, think industry film person with grey hair tied back into ponytail, plaid, jeans, ppp.

As for learning about the internet, hopefully more than a flat internet things one. Maybe eating online -a not flat internet things- will be possible instead of sat in the corner of a room with fake grass. Off to catch the flight. Will update you all after having brunch with the albatross' uncle in NewYorkBerlin.
